

TRUE / FALSE

- | | |
|--|--|
| 1. ____: According to Locke, many important ideas in the human mind are innate. | 22. ____: According to Descartes, the eternal truths are something not even God could change or could have established differently. |
| 2. ____: | 23. ____: |
| 3. ____: | 24. ____: |
| 4. ____: | 25. ____: |
| 5. ____: | 26. ____: According to Mandeville, skillful politicians do not originate the idea of virtue and vice, but only redirect it in a way they find advantageous. |
| 6. ____: | 27. ____: |
| 7. ____: According to Berkeley, the fact that we don't have any abstract ideas makes it impossible for us to engage in abstract reasoning. | 28. ____: |
| 8. ____: | 29. ____: |
| 9. ____: | 30. ____: According to Hutcheson, there isn't any significant analogy between our moral sense and our sense of beauty. |
| 10. ____: | 31. ____: |
| 11. ____: According to Hume, impressions have more 'force and vivacity' than ideas do. | 32. ____: |
| 12. ____: | 33. ____: |
| 13. ____: | 34. ____: |
| 14. ____: | 35. ____: According to Rousseau, there are pre-rational instincts that can lead to peaceful behavior. |
| 15. ____: | 36. ____: |
| 16. ____: According to Kant, two marks of the a priori are strict universality and necessity. | 37. ____: |
| 17. ____: | 38. ____: |
| 18. ____: | 39. ____: |
| 19. ____: | 40. ____: According to Wollstonecraft, the oppressive way women are educated and treated in society doesn't change the fact that women have their own form of virtue, different from but equal to the virtue of men. |
| 20. ____: | 41. ____: |
| 21. ____: | |

8. Briefly describe Kant's "Copernican revolution" in metaphysics. (Hint: it concerns the relation between our cognition and the objects of our cognition.)
9. What does Kant think about the problem of the synthetic a priori?
- A. The problem cannot be solved.
 - B. It can be solved if there are certain a priori forms in the human mind.
 - C. It can be solved by reintroducing the possibility of innate ideas.
 - D. When rightly understood, the alleged problem turns out not to be a problem at all.
10. Which of these is one of the main points moral rationalists (e.g. Cudworth, Leibniz, Clarke) make against the view that eternal truths depend on God's will?
- A. God's will makes commands necessarily, but eternal truths are supposed to be contingent.
 - B. Strictly speaking, God doesn't have a will, but only an intellect: things become real when God knows them, not when God wills them.
 - C. It's clearly impossible for certain eternal truths—namely, eternal truths about God's own existence and nature—to depend on God's will.
 - D. Since it's impossible for God's will to be guided by God's intellect, God's will is completely arbitrary and cannot be the ground of necessary and eternal truths.
11. According to Hobbes, moral philosophy concerns certain "laws of nature": e.g., to show gratitude to those who have helped you. Leaving aside anything to do with God, what does Hobbes say is the ultimate reason we should follow these laws?
13. Which of the following quotations from Hume contains his main argument against moral rationalism?
- A. It has been observ'd, that reason, in a strict and philosophical sense, can have an influence on our conduct only after two ways: Either when it excites a passion by informing us of the existence of something which is a proper object of it; or when it discovers the connexion of causes and effects, so as to afford us means of exerting any passion. These are the only kinds of judgment, which can accompany our actions, or can be said to produce them in any manner; and it must be allow'd, that these judgments may often be false and erroneous.
 - B. Shou'd it be pretended, that tho' a mistake of fact be not criminal, yet a mistake of right often is; and that this may be the source of immorality: I wou'd answer, that 'tis impossible such a mistake can ever be the original source of immorality, since it supposes a real right and wrong; that is, a real distinction in morals, independent of these judgments. A mistake, therefore, of right may become a species of immorality; but 'tis only a secondary one, and is founded on some other, antecedent to it.
 - C. But what may suffice entirely to destroy this whimsical system is, that it leaves us under the same difficulty to give a reason why truth is virtuous and falshood vicious, as to account for the merit or turpitude of any other action. I shall allow, if you please, that all immorality is deriv'd from this suppos'd falshood in action, provided you can give me any plausible reason, why such a falshood is immoral. If you consider rightly of the matter, you will find yourself in the same difficulty as at the beginning.
 - D. Since morals, therefore, have an influence on the actions and affections, it follows, that they cannot be deriv'd from reason; and that because reason alone, as we have already prov'd, can never have any such influence. Morals excite passions, and produce or prevent actions. Reason of itself is utterly impotent in this particular. The rules of morality, therefore, are not conclusions of our reason.

14. What does Hume mean with his statement that “Reason is, and ought only to be the slave of the passions”?
- A. We should follow our passions and live spontaneously rather than following our reason and living in a cold and calculated fashion.
 - B. Reason cannot produce its own motives, but can only provide information that might redirect motives from the passions.
 - C. People don’t form their beliefs on the basis of reason, but just believe whatever they feel like believing due to their passions.
 - D. We should believe whatever satisfies our passionate needs instead of subjecting everything to reason.
15. Kant presents some different formulas for the categorical imperative (they start with something like “Act so that...” or “Act as if...”). State one of these formulas for the categorical imperative, and give a specific example of how he derives a concrete duty (telling us a kind of action that’s morally required or morally prohibited) from this formula. You can be brief.

Formula:

Concrete duty:

Derivation:

16. According to Kant, who is the lawgiver of the moral law?

LONGER ANSWER

17. What is Berkeley’s “master argument” for idealism? Explain it in (let’s say roughly) three to six sentences. (You don’t have to use numbered premise-conclusion form, but be sure to make it clear what his conclusion is, and what kind of support he provides for it.)